3 more things to consider:
 - Communicate not only with concise words, but body language, including facial expression. If the physical communication doesn't match the spoken communication, your message confuses the listener.
 - There must be a speaker, and a listener for communication to occur. Speaking includes verbal/written and physical. Listening includes hearing and matching the non-verbal to the verbal/written.
 - As a listener, what you perceive being said is incredibly important. Be an active listener- provide feedback to the speaker on what you heard. Don't listen to respond-listen to understand.
